Operations Strategist for Home Service Companies

Over the past decade, I've had the opportunity to work inside some of the fastest-growing home service companies in the country, helping build the operational infrastructure behind their growth.

My career began as the first office employee at NexGen Air Conditioning, Heating & Plumbing, where I wore nearly every operational hat imaginable—from CSR, dispatcher, accounting, payroll, purchasing, and HR to eventually serving as Chief Operating Officer. As the company expanded from a small local operation into a $100M organization, I grew alongside it, helping implement the systems, processes, reporting structures, and accountability that supported each stage of growth.

Working alongside my brother, Ismael Valdez, founder of NexGen, gave me a front-row seat to what it truly takes to build and scale a home service business. More importantly, it taught me that sustainable growth isn't created by working harder—it's built through better operations.

Today, I bring those lessons to contractors across the country through Contractor Stack.

Rather than focusing on software alone, I help business owners uncover operational blind spots, identify bottlenecks, and strengthen the foundation of their business.

My approach combines real-world operational experience with a systems mindset, allowing me to quickly connect the dots between people, processes, technology, reporting, and profitability.

Most operational challenges are symptoms of something deeper.

My job is helping you find it.

Why Contractors Hire Me

Contractors don't hire me because they need another consultant.

They hire me because something doesn't feel right.

Margins are shrinking.

Reporting doesn't tell the full story.

The team isn't operating as efficiently as it should.

Growth has slowed—or it's creating more stress than success.

I help owners identify what's really holding their business back, prioritize the right opportunities, and build operational systems that support long-term success.
